Heard on @BBCRadio4 this morning that a child with SEN was denied funding for a fully electric wheelchair which would have enabled him to independently because "socialising is not a medical need". Awful barrier to development. #occupationaltherapy #OTalk

How do people think like this? Living is a 'medical' need you can't live, without going out, breathing air, seeing things, meeting people, (trust me is mental too) person/s making that decision have freedom to make stupid choices! So why can't others have equal Freedoms.

Rhiannon @steedie1978

@AbleOTUK @RebeccaCus @RachaelD_OT Yes! There's a feeling of the need to prove circumstances / needs too and going it's significant enough. Extension requests have so much associated negativity and could create a sense of failure for someone #otalk

AbleOTUK @AbleOTUK

@steedie1978 @RebeccaCus @RachaelD_OT Yes! Feeling a failure for requesting good an extension is far too common. This really need to change #OTalk

AbleOTUK @AbleOTUK

The effects of loneliness on mental ill health are well documented. So yes socialising is a medical need!!!

@OTinOP625 This is an interesting one as the level of evidence put expert opinions, lived experience, and narratives reviews near the bottom of the pyramid more important? #OTalk

AbleOTUK @AbleOTUK

@smileyfacehalo Yes, the narrative that we all follow the same trajectory need to be challenged #OTalk

AbleOTUK @AbleOTUK

@KarenScorerOT Can you discuss important topics without having a biscuit or two? 🍪 I know I can't. I ate a whole packet of Jaffa cakes during the launch #OTalk
